A conference next took place between the two Houses, on the subject of the Irish resolutions; after which their Lordships withdrew into the House, and, after a short debate, gave their assent to the same.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 22.

PASSED the bill for securing the duties on the importation of tobacco.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer observed, that the great drought which had prevailed in all parts of the country, had occasioned a scarcity of hay, and of course considerably advanced the price of that commodity. It became necessary, therefore, to refrain, for a limited time, the exportation of that article, lest the demand for it from foreign kingdoms should not leave a sufficient stock for home consumption. He should, therefore, move for leave to bring in a bill for prohibiting the exportation of hay for a limited time, and hoped it would pass the House with all possible dispatch; because, if it was delayed, it would not answer the purpose he had in view, which was to avert the danger of an article so essential to the subsistence of cattle, from rising to an extravagant price. The Right Hon. Gentleman then moved for leave to bring in the bill.

Mr Gascoigne, sen. expressed his disapprobation of the proposed bill, as injurious to the owners of hay in the inland parts of the country, many of whom had a large stock on hand.

Lord North said, if there was a necessity for laying an embargo upon hay, the necessity existed at that moment. He was a friend, therefore, to the bill, and wished it to be passed with all possible speed.

Lord Beauchamp spoke in favour of the motion, observing, that though hay was a bulky article, it had been exported to so distant a country as Sweden, after dry and unfavourable seasons in that kingdom.

Mr Dempster opposed the motion as unnecessary. In all probability the present scarcity, he said, would not continue more than three weeks; and in their present distress it would be but neighbourly to assist the French, who, when they should cut their grain would have straw for their cattle, and then would not be under the necessity of making any considerable demands from this country.

The bill, however, was read a first and second time, and committed.

In the Committee a clause was added, suggested by Mr Eden, for excepting such hay from seizure as shall be on ship-board for exportation on the 23d of July. The report was then brought up, and the bill read a third time, passed, and ordered to be taken to the Lords.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer now moved the order of the day for taking into consideration the amendments made by the Lords to the Irish resolutions; which being read accordingly, he said, it became the dignity of that House to be extremely tenacious of their privilege of raising supplies. On a former day it had been suggested, that some of the amendments made by the Lords could not be recognized by that House, without surrendering in part of the privilege just mentioned, and establishing a precedent for the Lords to interfere in laying burdens upon the public; and he agreed, that some of the amendments would have that effect. He should move, therefore, that the consideration of the amendments be postponed for three months. This motion received no opposition.

Mr Eden said, if the intention of the Right Hon. Gentleman had been made known earlier, some time to himself and other gentlemen might have been saved.

A long and very complicated conversation here took place, between the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Fox, Mr Jenkinson, Mr Eden, and Mr Welbore Ellis, on the subject of duties, drawbacks, &c. but the arguments being little more than a recapitulation of what had been advanced in the different stages of the business in both Houses, we shall not repeat them.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer pressed the House that night to adopt the resolutions which had not been amended, and hoped they would go into a Committee for the consideration of the others, the amendments to which had been postponed for three months. He would now also, he said, take the liberty of stating to the House what he conceived to be the next necessary step, for accomplishing this important measure. This was, to move the House to agree to an address to his Majesty on the subject of the regulations to be established between the two kingdoms; and it was his design, previous to the recess, to move for leave to bring in a bill naturally growing out of the resolutions: But he meant not to precipitate the bill through the House; but wished it to be printed that gentlemen might avail themselves of the leisure the recess would give them to examine it.

Mr Dempster wished to be informed by the Right Hon. Gentleman, who was competent to debate those resolutions which had received no amendments?

The Speaker said, the resolutions, to which both Houses had given their consent, could not again be discussed.

Mr Eden wished to be informed to what time the recess was to extend.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, he conceived it would be proper when the bill, of which he had given notice, should be brought in, for Parliament to adjourn till some time in October.

Mr Fox desired to know, whether the next was to be an adjourned session; because, if a prorogation in the usual form did not take place, there would be no opportunity for repealing next year any of the acts which had passed in the course of this session, some of which, notwithstanding all the care and time employed on them, were yet so imperfect that it would be necessary to repeal them.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer could not pretend to ascertain when the persons who had the honour to serve his Majesty might deem it necessary to advise him to put a period to the session; but he would add, that for himself he was not a friend to an immediate prorogation, considering an adjournment as the more expedient measure, that the plan for the settlement of a commercial system between Great Britain and Ireland might not be obstructed.

Lord Beauchamp was averse to passing the resolution relative to the trade with the East Indies, as being premature, and observed, that when the charter of the East India Company should expire, if Government should not then renew it, this resolution would become void.

Mr Sheridan, Mr Dempster, and Sir James Erskine opposed the 17th and 18th resolutions, contending that the amendments interfered with the exclusive privilege of that House, the raising supplies.

Mr Welbore Ellis thought that the resolution went only to secure a monopoly for a limited time, of the emoluments arising from new inventions.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer then moved the House to resolve itself into a Committee on the resolutions, the amendments to which the House had agreed to postpone for three months, and the Committee being accordingly formed,

Mr Fox contended, that the brewery and many other branches would be greatly injured, if the resolutions were passed into a law.

The Committee having made some alterations in the amendments made to the resolutions by the House of Lords, the same were agreed to; and the House being resumed, the report was brought up, read, and agreed to.

The Chancellor then moved that the House do confer with the Lords, in order to acquaint their Lordships of the alterations just made, and to desire their concurrence.

Mr Fox observed, that what the Right Hon. Gentleman had said, respecting his intention of bringing in a bill founded on the resolutions, had been misunderstood by many. If he intended to bring it in immediately, or after the expiration of the adjournment, without knowing the determination of the Irish Parliament on the resolutions, it would, in either case, be preposterous. Should the Parliament of Ireland think proper to reject the propositions in toto, or make any alterations in them, as it was probable they would do, they must operate against the bill in the shape in which the Right Hon. Gentleman purposed to bring it in.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said he thought he had spoke plain enough to be understood: However he should now tell the Right Hon. Gentleman, and the House, that it was his intention on Monday next, after moving the address, to move for leave to bring in the bill. He did not now mean to debate the merits of it, being confident the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr Fox) would hereafter afford him frequent opportunities of discussing it. The discourse ending here, the motion was now put and agreed to; after which the several members who before attended, immediately went to the Painted Chamber, where they conferred with the Lords on the alterations made in the resolutions; and having returned, the Chancellor of the Exchequer reported to the House the result of the conference, after which it adjourned.

LONDON, July 23.

The question which has occasioned several meetings of the Cabinet, viz. Whether Parliament should adjourn, or be prorogued? was decided at a cabinet council, held at Mr Pitt's, on Thursday night, to adjourn only. The determination of this cabinet was again debated at Lord Carmarthen's yesterday morning, and confirmed. Having gone through these ordeals, it was laid before the King, yesterday at noon, (before it was communicated in the House) and his Majesty signifying no disapprobation, it became a measure of Government, not to prorogue, but to adjourn Parliament to the middle of October next.

The use made of proxies on the last great division proves the wisdom and propriety of Lord Beaumont's motion, to abolish them in the Irish House of Peers.

The mode of voting by proxy, at all times unsatisfactory and rather suspicious, should at least be guarded with rather more restrictions than at present. One obvious alteration for the better would be in the publication of the proxies for whom and by whom, and above all, the precise date of the deputation being given.

The East India Company have determined to take up 25 ships for China, and intend to take up five more as soon as they can be got ready.

It may be depended on as a fact, that General Washington, late Commander in Chief of the American army, has actually hired a house at Walworth (within two miles of the metropolis) for the purpose of his residence. Gazetteer.

EDINBURGH.

Extract of a letter from London, July 23.

"It is at length determined to bring in a bill, the preparation of which has been delayed, on the Irish propositions, and to move for the same, by way of an address to the Throne, on Monday next, when a very late and interesting debate is expected to take place. In a few days afterwards, the bill will be brought forward should the motion be carried for it, of which there is no doubt when another grand stand will be made against the proposition by the opponents of Administration. The bill will then be printed for the information of the members, and sent to the land, when the Parliament will be adjourned till October, which time the propositions will, in all probability, be received back from thence.

"The Parliament, however, is not expected to be up a fortnight, and it was not till Thursday evening that Ministers made up their minds, whether the Parliament should be prorogued or adjourned, when the question was carried for adjourning it, by one vote.

"A certain eminent contractor, who has been for some time in confinement, and is sentenced to stand in the pillory for crime of perjury, has at length, it is confidently reported, means to get a pardon."

The Magistrates have sentenced an officer, principally concerned in the riot committed in the Theatre on Wednesday last, to pay a fine of twenty guineas. We hear the Magistrates are determined to advance ten guineas progressively on every future delinquent, in order to try whether their sentences, or the purses of those gentlemen who chafe to see themselves in this manner, will first give way.

The trial of William Mills, mentioned in our last, continued till near eight o'clock at night. The evidence was led up on the part of the Crown by the Lord Advocate, for the panel by Mr McConochie; after which the Lord Justice Clerk delivered his charge to the jury, who soon after closed, and yesterday returned their verdict, all in one finding the panel guilty of art and part of the crimes libelled against him.

Mr Swinton and Mr McConochie moved an arrest of judgment, on account of one of the jury having gone out of Court before they enclosed, and of an informality, as it was alleged in the verdict. Mr Solicitor General replied. The Court were of opinion, that the objection, with regard to the verdict was a frivolous one, and therefore over-ruled it; but, with respect to the juryman's being out of Court, they thought the much more serious matter; and after taking a declaration from himself, ordered printed informations to be given in, that the panel to be ready by Tuesday next, and for the trial to be by Friday thereafter. The Court then adjourned till Monday the 8th of August next, when they will give judgment upon this point.

Last night, we had here a great deal of thunder and lightning; but what is very remarkable, unaccompanied with much much was threatened, the sky being remarkably clear and dark.

of Commons, for

By the Hon. Mr Hewit—from the town of Belfast.
By Mr Alexander—from the city of Londonderry.
By the Hon. Mr Caffé—from the city of Kilkenny.
By Mr Meade Ogle—from the city of Drogheda.

Mr Kearney called the attention of the House to recollect, that when they last met he had expressed a wish, that the commercial adjustment between this country and Great Britain might, considering the lateness of the session, and the great difference of opinion that prevailed on the subject, be postponed until next session. What has since passed, (continued he) has not at all conducted to make me alter my opinion on the subject: The general disapprobation I have every where seen, and the reprobation the propositions have met with from numerous and respectable meetings in this kingdom, not to mention the difference of opinion I find in England between two of the most respectable characters in the cabinet, on their meaning, has determined me to fulfil the promise I made to move the postponing of them, therefore I now move the following resolution, "That though we ardently wish, to remove every jealousy between this kingdom and Great Britain, we must, on account of the lateness of the season, postpone any further consideration thereof, until next session."

Before the question was put, at the pressing instance of Mr Forbes, and other gentlemen on the same side of the House, who declared the matter somewhat premature, Mr Kearney obligingly withdrew his motion.

The Hon. Mr Ward presented a petition to the House against the commercial propositions, signed by 1789 freeholders of the county of Down.

The Attorney General observed, that all the names, two excepted, appeared written by the clerk, who copied the petition, and therefore the petition was inadmissible, in name of any other persons than the two, whose names were subscribed by themselves: I find also a blank for a name, being William Mac—

Mr Ward in reply declared he had all the original names in his possession, and that he would have them joined to the petition against to-morrow, until which time he begged to withdraw the petition; which was granted.

Mr Corry then moved severally for the following papers:

"That the proper officer lay before the House an account of what articles from the East Indies are prohibited to be imported here for home consumption.

"That the proper officer lay before this House an account of the number of men raised in this kingdom, for the service of the navy, pursuant to the vote of 20,000 men."

Both ordered accordingly, after which the House adjourned to next day.

To the Printer of the Caledonian Mercury.

SIR,
A SENSIBLE author on natural history has remarked, as an instance of the beneficent care of Providence, that, wherever a poisonous weed is produced, its antidote is found at no great distance from it.

The same attention to our preservation has ordained, that the beasts of prey, which, from their nature, and the domestic animals, which, from accidental causes, are excited to do hurt, shall have some peculiarity in their method of attack, which counterbalances their strength or fierceness.—Thus the tiger makes but one spring; the enraged bull shuts his eyes; and the mad dog runs straight forward. There is an animal which, in the unprovoked brutality that prompts it to indiscriminate mischief, resembles much the last of these creatures; and it should, when it is discovered, immediately meet the same treatment. Unfortunately it is sometimes long concealed. It gains access to us unsuspected, and marks, in the day, those objects it afterwards attacks in the dark. From our security, this creature would be dreadful, if that Providence which protects us from less dangers, had not been particularly careful to fix in its constitution a certain check to its excesses; a check which grows with its strength, and increases with its viciousness.

The animal I have in view, is the man who has attained to great a degree of depravity, that he is capable of feeling a diabolical satisfaction in sowing the seeds of distrust and enmity among his fellow-citizens. To gratify this malevolent disposition, his first care is to keep himself unknown; his next, to chuse such men as, from their offices or situation, are most obvious to public notice; his last, to blacken their characters by insinuations as mean as they are false.

Here, fortunately, the check operates; and when his malevolence is at its greatest height, his folly overtops it, and the weakness of his head defeats the wickedness of his heart. I was led into these reflections by a letter signed Civis, which appeared in your last Saturday's paper. The intention of the writer is evidently to prejudice the inhabitants of Edinburgh against the officers of the corps which lately marched into the Castle. With this honourable view, he takes advantage of the indiscretion of one person heated with wine, (for there was but one of the corps now in the Castle concerned in the riot;) and he insinuates, that the disturbance was entirely raised by the officers of that corps, who, he says, "presuming on their own soldiers, who were on duty, pressed forward into the Shakespeare, and attempted to displace those gentlemen who occupied the back rows." The fact is, that, of four officers of the 58th, who were in the last row of the Shakespeare, one gave up his seat at the beginning of the play, to oblige a gentleman of the town; the remaining three, at the commencement of the disturbance, quitted their places, and used their utmost endeavours to put an end to it. This circumstance Civis wilfully forgets; and his letter, with the charitable intention of creating jealousy in the minds of those who do not see through his little arts, is so worded as to lead to a belief, that the guard, which, at the request of the Manager, is sent to preserve peace and good order, was that night employed to support the riot.

This, too, is false, and deserves the contempt which men of honour feel for the composer of the complicated species of lie, which includes equivocation. To those who were seated near the Shakespeare, and saw what passed, the duplicity of Civis will be evident. But many respectable people, who were not present, judging from the candour of their own hearts, and thinking it highly improbable that any one should, deliberately and uninjured, calumniate a number of men, might very naturally have given credit to his assertions, if preventive folly did not here step in; and lead him, in the wantonness of malice, to insult the citizens of Edinburgh collectively. He affirms, "that the tameness of an Edinburgh audience is proverbial, and that indignation is all it has the courage to bestow."

Folly does not stop here: she leads him a little farther; and he concludes his letter, by attacking the respectable gentlemen who fill the first offices in the magistracy of this town. He insinuates, that they are neglectful of their charge, and threatens to persecute them, and disgrace your paper, by the stupidity of his future correspondence. From the intolerance of the last charges, the candid will judge what credit is to be given to the first. The latter part of his letter is a beacon to warn the public of the malice hid in the former. General Contribution for the Royal Infirmary.

BY appointment of the General Assembly, a COLLECTION is to be made next Sunday, in all the Churches of this Presbytery, for the ROYAL INFIRMARY, in order to render that institution more extensively beneficial, by enabling the Managers to admit a greater number of Patients into the House. As many persons, who may wish to give their aid towards promoting this useful charity, do not attend the established Churches, they are requested to send their contributions to Mr Archibald Hope, Treasurer of the Infirmary, at his office, as Secretary to the Royal Bank.

The act of Assembly, read in the Churches last Sunday, is here inserted, for the information of such as had not then an opportunity of hearing it.

At EDINBURGH, the 25th day of May 1785 years.

WHICH day the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland had transmitted to them, by their Committee for bills, a petition for the Managers of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh; the tenor whereof follows: "Unto the very Reverend the Moderator and remanent Members of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, the Petition of the Managers of the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh, humbly sheweth, That, above forty years ago, the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh was established upon principles the most humane and liberal. The benefits of the institution are not confined to one place, or to persons of any particular description. The indigent and diseased, wherever their usual residence may be, are considered and received as proper objects of this charity. Patients from every part of the kingdom, even from several of the most remote countries, have been admitted into the Hospital, and sent home to their relations, relieved or cured. In consequence of the regulations established from time to time by the Managers of the Infirmary, and the rules prescribed by them to the Physicians, Surgeons, and other persons employed in the House, it may be affirmed, that there are few Hospitals, in which arrangements, both medical and domestic, have been framed and conducted with greater propriety. The Managers have the satisfaction to find, that their attention to the Patients under their care has been amply rewarded by the uncommon success with which they have been treated; as the number of deaths to the number of persons admitted into the Infirmary, hardly exceed the proportion of one to twenty-five. But, beneficial as the effects of the institution have been, this is the state of the Hospital's funds, that the Public does not enjoy them in that degree to which they might be extended: For although, by the donations of charitable and well-disposed persons, in various parts of the British dominions, the capital stock of the Infirmary be considerable, the number of Patients which it enables the Managers to receive into the Hospital, is not nearly equal to the number of those who apply for admission. In consequence of this, the Physicians in attendance are under the necessity, either of refusing altogether to admit diseased persons who apply, or they must endeavour to obtain money from them, or their relations, for their maintenance, while they continue supernumeraries above the stated establishment of Patients which the funds of the Hospital can support: Of course, many proper objects of this charity are entirely excluded from enjoying the benefit of it, and many useful members of the community perish. As it is with deep regret that the Managers have often found themselves obliged to reject the applications of distressed persons, who, by proper medical assistance, might have been restored to health: As they hope that the Royal Infirmary will be considered by their countrymen as an institution not merely of local utility, but of public and national benefit, they humbly request, that the Venerable Assembly of this Church, from which they have not solicited aid for more than forty years, will be pleased to appoint a Collection to be made in all the parish-churches throughout the kingdom, on any day that shall appear to the Venerable Assembly most proper, in order to render that charitable and Christian institution more extensively beneficial. Signed in name, and by appointment of the Managers, (Signed) WILLIAM ROBERTSON, one of the said Managers, appeared, and was heard in support of the same; and the General Assembly being well satisfied, that the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh is a charitable institution of public and national utility, and desirous to render the beneficial effects of it still more extensive, unanimously agreed to grant the desire of the petition; and did, and hereby do appoint a General Collection over the Church, for the benefit of the Royal Infirmary, to be made in the Presbytery of Edinburgh on or before the first Sunday of August next, and through the rest of the kingdom, on such days as shall be fixed, by the several Presbyteries, within their respective bounds, before February next; and appoint the money collected to be transmitted to Mr Archibald Hope, Secretary to the Royal Bank of Scotland, and Treasurer to the Royal Infirmary. And the Assembly appoint the foregoing petition, together with this appointment of the Assembly, to be transmitted to Presbyteries, that it may be read in the several Churches on the Lord's Day immediately preceding the Collection. Extracted from the records of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, by JOHN DRYSDALE, Cl. Sec. Sw. he
